

A princess every day of her life...

When four-year-old Peyton was in treatment for her cancer, other children undergoing their treatment often talked about their trips to Walt Disney World. Since Peyton is a true little princess, the most natural thing in the world was for her to want to visit the Disney princesses for her once-in-a-lifetime magical wish.

Neighborhood Credit Union threw a small bon voyage party for Peyton, complete with a pink satin backpack loaded with trinkets for the plane. Although her hair had not yet grown out enough to hold her tiara, there was no mistaking the "princess" in Peyton. But a true princess rides in a coach – and so did Peyton – drawn by two magnificent horses, down a lane strewn with rose petals. The whole neighborhood turned out for her royal departure. From there a limousine, with police escort, ushered her on her way to a hotel by DFW airport. With an early morning departure the next day, it was a great way to get started!

Mom, Dad, older sister Lindsay and Peyton boarded the plane, ready for her adventure. Their villa at Give Kids the World Village, a magical home away-from-home for wish kids and their families, was loaded with toys and snacks. The family was ready for anything! "Anything" specifically was breakfast with Cinderella, a definite princess-meets-princess moment.

Disney Hand, worldwide outreach of The Walt Disney Company, helped make Peyton's trip memorable with stickers that allowed her to head to the front of the lines, have special seating for all the shows and receive extra hugs from all the characters.

Peyton and her family thoroughly enjoyed their trip to Orlando, their time together and the magic that the "power of a wish" brought to them. It gave them the strength to endure their ordeal, the hope of seeing their child healthy and happy, and the joy that will continue to fill their lives each time they relive their extra special week together.
